Betrayed: The Legalization of Age Discrimination in the Workplace explains why so many workers in their 40s, 50s and above are out of work, laboring in part-time or temp jobs, and generally struggling to survive. The first time anyone from the AARP publicly criticized the efficacy of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 was in the summer of 2017, three years after the publication of my book, Betrayed: The Legalization of Age Discrimination in the Workplace. Betrayed: The Legalization of Age Discrimination in the Workplace explains why so many workers in their 40s, 50s and above are out of work, laboring in part-time or temp jobs, and generally struggling to survive. There's an unconscionable disconnect between the reality of age discrimination in employment and the response by our federal government. The AARP recently announced the results of a survey of 3,900 people aged 45 and older who were working part or full-time or looking for work .
